Midwest Tribal ECHO is a partnership between the Native American Community Clinic and Hennepin Healthcare (funded by DHS) to establish a foundation for ongoing information sharing and relationship building across Native American serving organizations. Our goal is to provide access to culturally responsive practices for the treatment of substance use disorders, specifically, but not limited to, opioid use disorder. ECHO is a video conference learning platform that allows for resource sharing and regional collaboration to close the gap on health disparities and inequities experienced by on-reservation and urban dwelling Native Americans.
